

V.019
February
Week Two

Today, I decided I needed a project. Yes, another project. One that doesn't involve being in my freezing cold studio. What is it that would make my heart sing? What would make me feel warm and cozy? What would give me great pleasure and want to get up early? Let me preface this by saying that there is a long established pattern here in the Pinnick household. It seems that when husband is away on business, I get these overwhelming, uncontrollable urges to paint walls. Last time he was away, I found a small, awkward wall to paint with chalkboard paint. I've realized that I've been asking him a lot lately when he'll be leaving for another trip. It then dawned on me that what I really wanted was not for him to leave, but for me to paint, so, here's my plan...

#1 - kitchen walls

Lots of red in my house already including kitchen chairs, leather couch, patterned window treatments.

#2 - kitchen ceiling

recover a small, antique wing chair and paint the back wall of bookshelves

This represents the wood floors and cabinets. It's also in my big living room rug. I would have chosen a darker, richer shade but this was finished when we bought the house.

#3 - accent wall in Living room

more accent hues in pillows, rugs, etc.

